

The Spectrum Active Advantage Fund Update

Fund Commentary

Equities faltered in February as investors adjusted to the uncertain outlook brought about by the assertive trade tactics of the new administration. Small and mid-cap indexes fared worse, as major indexes fell below key technical levels such as their 200-day moving averages. Large-cap stocks such as those in the S&P 500 Index and NASDAQ 100 Index performed well early in the month with both having set new 52-week highs before pulling back in the latter half of the month. SAPEX entered February leaning more toward larger caps, including investments with traditionally defensive/lower beta characteristics. Overall exposure was reduced in the latter half of the month as momentum weakened across the board in an attempt to balance overall exposure with investments maintaining positive trends.

NYSE Composite TR Index (NYATR): measures the performance of all stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange. It includes more than 1,900 stocks, of which over 1,500 are U.S. companies. Its breadth therefore makes it a much better indicator of market performance than narrow indexes that have far fewer components. The weights of the index constituents are calculated on the basis of their free-float market capitalization. The index itself is calculated on the basis of price return and total return, which includes dividends.

S&P 500 TR Index is a capitalization weighted index of 500 stocks representing all major domestic industry groups. The S&P 500 TR assumes the reinvestment of dividends and capital gains. It is not possible to directly invest in any index.
